MARCUS MANLIUS CAPITOLINUS
d. 384? BC

Consul 392 BC. Took refuge in the Capitol when Rome was taken by the Gauls (c 389). Aroused by the cockling of the sacred geese at night, he repulsed the Gauls from the hill. According to legend, he defended plebeian debtors from harsh patrician creditors, and the following year he was impeached for high treason and thrown from

392 BC (396? BC) Romans conquer Veii

Nearly all the time since the inauguration of the republic, Rome had been at war with its neighbors, often fighting for its very existence. Toward the end of the 5th century there was an exceptionally long and hard struggle with the city of VEII, north of the Tiber, an ancient rival for control of the salt deposits at the river mouth, and control of the trade routes. At last (392 BC) the Romans took the city and sacked it. Some of its citizens who were of Latin stock were taken into the Roman
